For your battle-meal potation There s nothing here to quaff; Upon the board hot-smoking The silver dishes glow; A cold meal is provoking, And thirst annoys me so. Appeased, with friendly feeling, The portals they pass through, And here from floor to ceiling, To Fridthjof all was new. Rough planks well matched together Lined not the spacious hall, But broidered golden leather Was stretched along the wall. The center was not littered By mortared hearthstone wide; A marble fireplace glittered, Built up against the side. No smoke mid rafters flitted, No roof with soot spread o er: Glass panes the windows fitted, A lock secured the door. No wooden torches crackling, Illumed the champions feast, But waxen candles, sparkling, In silver sconces placed. A roasted stag, well larded, The table s center graced; Gold bands his raised hoof guarded, With flowers his horns were dressed....
