Not illustrated. 1907 Excerpt: . bold in execution, has the stimulating quality needed by art workers with marked commercial conditions to grapple with. Woodwork of this character is not only sufficiently good and sufficiently vigorous in its appeal to the slumbering aesthetic sense to win its way in a community more or less alien to the interests of craftsmen who also are artists, it is at the same time sufficiently definite in style, of a sufficiently positive individuality, to impose a standard upon the surroundings in which it is placed. The strength and beauty of proportion in the structural designs, the combined breadth and richness of the ornament and the delightful variety of the light and shade resulting from the crisp treatment of the surfaces on which the tool marks show without giving the effect of roughness, make a total to be reckoned with in any scheme of decoration and...
