Excerpt: .on points and slopes of the bed rock as well as in the deepest portion. Nuggets found on high reefs above the level of the stream, imply that their weight enabled them to remain in their position, during the deeper erosion of the neighboring streams, and that the original vein from which they came, is not far off. As a rule, large nuggets and coarse gold are found much nearer to the source whence they came, than fine or flour gold, which is often carried to unlimited distances away out on the plains. The character of quartz veins and of their enclosing rocks in the immediate vicinity, decides the character, too, of gravels derived from them, hence sometimes a peculiar pebble may be traced up to the peculiar rock whence it came, and the gold vein be found near it in place. It has been observed that leads following the course or lines of a gold-bearing reef, maintain a more continuous yield than those crossing a number of gold reefs at intervals. Gold occurs in pockets and shoots at intervals, with barren portions between, which accounts for what we have stated above. In a country where the gold quartz veins are small, though rich at wide intervals, the gravels will also be small. In very deep ground where the wash is very heavy a series of borings or even shafts are made to test the quality of the bank. The following points have been...
