RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 62 pages. Dimensions: 9.7in. x 7.4in. x 0.1in.This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1909 Excerpt: . . . only two spools would be necessary, for the middle spool (Fig. 192) is used as a support to keep the top line of cans from sagging. When a boy turns the crank or windlass at Fig. 190 the can-laden belt of clothes-line moves over the spools; the cans on top, being all upside down, go down into the water in that position at Fig. 194, and come up on the under side of the spool filled with water. When they reach the top spool (Fig. 190), they turn upside down and empty the water into a wooden trough placed there to catch it, and from the trough the water runs into the barrel (Fig. 196). Fig. 193 shows the clothes-line with the wooden spreaders attached by a wire and the tin can attached to a spreader. Fig. 192 shows a front view of the middle or supporting spool with a broomstick shaft. This spool and the lower one (Fig. 194) are both made of hard-bread crates. Fig. 195 shows some wooden washers, which are simply pieces of boards with holes bored through them, and used each side of the hard-bread crate to prevent it from rubbing against the upright posts. Fig. 197 shows the end of the spreader, the wire, and the notches in the flat stick to hold the wire when it is bound to the rope. A hard-bread crate may not be handy for my readers, but a slatted cylinder is an easy thing...
