The men were standing between the horses, and their revolvers cocked. Bovvens answer was to hand his weapon over to the Superintendent and to creep into the gunyah on his hands and knees. Heres something or other, his voice cried thickly from within. Its half buried; wait a bit. Look as sharp as you can! All right; but its a box, and heavy! Kilbride peered nervously to right, left, and center; then his eyes fell upon his companion wriggling back into the open, a shallow, oblong box in his arms, its polish dimmed and dusted with the mould, as though they had violated a grave. Kick it open! exclaimed Kilbride excitedly. But there was no need for that; the box was not even locked; and the lifted lid revealed an inner one of glass, protecting a brass cylinder with steel...
